

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A control circuit for an optical record medium processing device and a method of controlling the optical record medium processing device are implemented in a computer system in both power-on and power-off status. The control circuit provides a control signal
5 to enable the optical record medium processing device to automatically respond to the control signal and work correspondingly, regardless of whether the computer system is powered or not.